An accomplished technologist, entrepreneur and investor, Julie Hanna works with purpose-driven companies that are solving some of humanity's most pressing challenges. Since 2009, she has served as Executive Chairwoman at Kiva, inventor of the crowdfunding model and the world's largest lending marketplace for underserved micro-entrepreneurs.

Hanna serves as senior advisor to X (formerly Google X), Alphabet's Moonshot Factory, where breakthrough technologies like the driverless car are invented. She is Venture Partner at Obvious Ventures and is board director of Reinvent Technology Partners Z (NYSE: RTPZ).

In 2015, President Obama appointed her Presidential Ambassador for Global Entrepreneurship to help develop the next generation of entrepreneurs in the U.S. and abroad. Hanna is a former board director of Mozilla Corporation and The Esalen Institute. She has been an early investor in numerous technology companies, including Lyft (NASDAQ: LYFT), Lending Club (NASDAQ: LC) and Bonobos (acquired by Walmart).

Hanna has been founder, CEO or founding executive of five Silicon Valley, venture-backed companies, resulting in two IPOs and two successful acquisitions giving her a deep understanding of consumer internet and B2B companies from startup to scale-up. She has been instrumental in pioneering many groundbreaking technologies and products that are internet mainstays today and that have enabled hundreds of millions of people to connect, communicate and collaborate on a global scale. Among them, Healtheon (now WebMD NASDAQ: WBMD), the world's largest healthcare portal, VoIP pioneer onebox.com ($850M acquisition by phone.com, NASDAQ: UPIP), open source trailblazer, Scalix and Portola (acquired by Netscape).

Hanna is an internationally acclaimed speaker and writer on purpose-driven profit and the democratizing potential of technology to create a more just, free and abundant world. In recognition of her vision and global impact on economic and social progress, she was named the United States Woman Icon of APEC and is a recipient of the 2016 Global Empowerment Award.
